ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

The proposed one-day national multidisciplinary academic conference titled "AI, Human Values and Inclusive Peace: Converging Perspectives from Science and Humanities" aims at fostering critical dialogue on the dynamic intersections between artificial intelligence, ethical frameworks, and the pursuit of inclusive global peace. As AI technologies increasingly influence human decision-making, governance, education, health, and social interaction, it is imperative to explore how human values can be safeguarded and integrated into technological advancement. The conference seeks to bring together academics, scholars, researchers, postgraduate students and practitioners from diverse disciplines ranging from computer science, philosophy, and ethics to sociology, literature, and political science to examine how AI can be aligned with human dignity, equity, and sustainable peace. By creating a platform for interdisciplinary exchange, the event aspires to generate insights that support responsible innovation and deepen our collective understanding of how science and the humanities can jointly contribute to a more inclusive and ethically conscious future.
